You can check in online for your flight with that airline.

The subject of the sentence is told he or she can do the verb check in for a flight. Because check in is used as a verb, you would not hyphenate it.

Did you check in your baggage yet?

Likewise, in the sentence above, the subject of the sentence is asked if they did a verb, check in. Because it is neither used as a noun or adjective, you would keep it unhyphenated.

Spelling, grammar, capitalization, and punctuation mistakes

Spelling, grammar, capitalization, and punctuation are the four most basic elements you should hone to make your writing sound professional and to be taken seriously by your readers.

Spelling can be easily checked with built-in spell checkers in the writing software you are using or online proofreaders like Engram or Grammarly, which can also help with grammar, capitalization, and punctuation.

Avoid using flamboyant words or innovative grammar structures that you are unfamiliar with just to sound eloquent. The goal of a language is to communicate your thoughts to another, not to look cool. Opt for words and
